padding-bottom:12px;padding-top: Opx>> farmer's tan (also called golfer's tan) is a type of suntan that occurs on the arms and neck of people who spend a lot of time outdoors, especially in sunny or tropical climates. It is caused by the sun's ultraviolet rays, which stimulate the production of melanin in the skin. The farmer's tan is a protective mechanism that helps to prevent sunburn and skin damage. It is typically a light brown or tan color and is most noticeable on the forearms, neck, and chest. It is usually more prominent in the summer months and fades away in the winter months. The farmer's tan is a natural occurrence and is not a skin condition. It is a common sight among farmers, construction workers, and other people who work outdoors in sunny or tropical climates. It is a sign of a healthy, sun-kissed complexion.

The farmer's tan usually starts with a suntan covering the exposed parts of the arms and neck. This is a natural response to the sun's rays, which stimulate the production of melanin in the skin.
